

EAST AGAINST WEST

Presidential Campaign to Mark Geographical Cleavage in Party

Judging from scores of conversations with all sorts of people hereabouts, says a Philadelphia correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, it is more or less evident that in the next presidential campaign there is to be a cleavage between the east and west so far as the Republicans are concerned, not on candidates but on policies. In fact, the east is fully prepared to accept a western man as its candidate; it wants one, in fact. It is only on the question of governmental policy that the two sections are liable to split.

The great fight in the convention of 1908 probably will be over the platform. The east is conservative; the west is naturally progressive and even radical. The east owns railroads, the west is agricultural. The east gives to them their tonnage and their passenger traffic. The east has been made great through the operation of the internal protective tariff system. The west is losing foreign markets because of that same tariff, in whose benefits it shares remotely.

It is not strange, therefore, that the popular point of view should be so different in Philadelphia and New York from what it is in Chicago or St. Louis. The Roosevelt cult is by no means so dominant in New Jersey as in Iowa. There are lots of people hereabouts—good people, too, Republicans and respected citizens—who by no means approve of the present course of the chief magistrate. They do not hesitate to declare that he is a "grand stand player," and that, sometimes at least, he is a charlatan. Epithets and criticisms which would provoke a fight in Chicago or Kansas City frequently are voiced in New Jersey, Boston and Philadelphia.

Yet it should be understood now, as it will have to be understood later on, that throughout New England and the Middle States, there is a decided feeling either of doubt or of downright hostility to President Roosevelt and the theory of government he is supposed to represent. Part of this is honest criticism. Part of it, however, is fear. The great business interests are undeniably in a condition of mental panic lest Roosevelt should decide to run again for the presidency. They think that four years more of strenuousity will unsettle values to such an extent as to precipitate a financial crash.

There is a great deal of third term talk in this vicinity, to a large extent of the fearsome type. Many large business men have come to look upon Roosevelt as a "bogey man," and they are afraid he may determine to succeed himself in the control of the government. Third term sentiment in the east is not at all enthusiastic. On the contrary, there is every reason to believe that if President Roosevelt should run again he would lose thousands and tens of thousands of good Republican votes in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, New York and New England.

People hereabouts are not yet convinced that anything but a great national emergency could justify the country in breaking down the feeling against the third presidential term, which was originated by Washington and which has been carefully followed by the American people ever since. Most of those who are admirers of President Roosevelt do not believe that he can possibly be persuaded into accepting another nomination. Some of them go so far as to say that if he did so he would surely be beaten and that Bryan would be the beneficiary of this election of cherished tradition.
